Hague, January 4. The last Accounts we have from Prince Ferdinand's Army, are of the 30th past, which say, That M. de Broglie, (who has lately received the Marshal's Staff) had called in all his Detachments, with a seeming Design of attacking his Serene Highness: That on the 24th, the French Grenadiers, with the Troops placed between Budzbatch and Friedberg, advanced towards the Lahne: And that on the following Day a large Body of French, (which proved however to be only a Part of their Army) appeared before the Allies, but without coming to any Action; only a slight Cannonade passed between them on the 25th and 26th, on the Side of Klein Linnes and Heuchelheim, without any great Effect on either Part: And that on the 29th, Colonel Luckner had, with his Chasseurs, attacked a Body of the Enemy, consisting of 400 Men, the greatest Part of which were cut to Pieces, and the Commanding Officer, with all the rest, (excepting only 22 Men who escaped) made Prisoners of War, and one Piece of Ordnance taken.

We hear, That the Hereditary Prince of Brunswick, with the Detachment under his Command, arrived on the 25th past at Chemnitz in Saxony, without the least Loss on his March; so that it is thought he might be able to join the King of Prussia the next Day, who, by the last Accounts of him of the 23d, was at Freyberg; at which Place, as well as the Grand Prussian Army, Things remained in their former State.
